

Democrat Op-Ed : The Choice Before Us

The choice before us is simple. Either government serves the public, or it serves the powerful few. The Democratic Party stands for the first principle: that ordinary men and women are entitled to decent work, fair wages, honest government, and the right to live without fear of poverty, illness, or oppression.

It seems that the current administration has chosen the opposite path. It elevates private gain above the public good. It twists the truth, fosters division, and weakens the very institutions that safeguard our democracy. What should be common sense — respect for facts, protection of the vulnerable, defense of the vote — has been treated instead as an obstacle to power.

We stand by the enduring principles of fairness and justice. We believe in a society where a child's health is not a luxury, where the labor of a worker is not exploited, and where the law binds the powerful as well as the weak. We believe the environment is not a commodity to be stripped bare, but the inheritance of future generations.

This is not a question of left or right, but of honesty against falsehood, decency against corruption, democracy against authoritarianism. Our task is to reclaim the common good, and to do so with clarity, courage, and unyielding resolve.
